The National Republican Congressional Committee (NRCC) announced

Wednesday they are expanding their offensive map to target 72 Democrat-held or newly created seats ahead of the 2022 midterms following the latest redistricting developments.

The NRCC, looking to pick up as many seats as possible to regain the House majority, expanded their list from 70 to 72 after the majority of states approved their redistricting maps. The House Republicans, who are favored to take back the House, only need a net gain of five seats. So far, there have been 31 House Democrats who announced they would not seek reelection.

The 72 targeted districts include 12 that were won in 2020 by former President Donald Trump, 11 that were won by President Joe Biden from zero to five percent, 16 that are were won by Biden from five percent to ten percent, and 33 were won by Biden from ten percent or more.

The new additions to the list are California's 13th and 26th Congressional Districts; Colorado's 8th Congressional District; Florida's 14th and 22nd; Illinois's 11th Congressional Districts; Michigan's 10th Congressional District; Montana's 1st Congressional District; North Carolina 6th, 13th, and 14th Congressional Districts; New Mexico 1st Congressional District; Nevada's 1st Congressional District; Ohio 9th Congressional District; Oregon's 6th Congressional District; and Texas's 38th Congressional District.

NRCC Chairman Tom Emmer said that "Republicans have the message, the candidates, and the resources needed to take back the majority. Vulnerable Democrats who chose not to retire will be shown no mercy."
